

About Meghan Rothschild

Meghan Rothschild was diagnosed with stage 2 melanoma at the young age of 20. After 2 1/2 years of baking herself in indoor tanning beds, she discovered a dark, itchy mole on her stomach.

Meghan didn't think anything of the spot, but had it removed anyways. A week later her doctor called her back into the office to have her stitches removed. It was here that she first heard the "C" word. She would spend her sophomore year in college battling cancer.

Since her diagnosis, Meghan has spent the last 7 years spreading the word about this deadly disease. She became a National Spokesperson for the American Academy of Dermatology in May of 2008. She has been featured on national news programs such as World News with Charles Gibson, The Mike and Juliet Show, and Inside Edition. In addition, Meghan has posed for Fitness Magazine, Teen Vogue, WebMD, and Marie Claire, to raise awareness about melanoma.

Meghan was awarded in 2010 by Cosmopolitan as part of the magazine's Practice Safe Sun campaign in New York City. She is a board member at the Melanoma Foundation of New England and a talk show host on Skin Talk, a CBS Springfield educational show.

Meghan was recently featured in the Dear 16-Year-Old me video that went viral and has since had over 5.5 million views on YouTube. It was listed as the top 7th most shared ad of 2011.

Meghan is passionate about this cause and would be ideal for any student awareness event, business seminar, fundraiser, and much more! Contact Meghan at MRothschild@SurvivingSkin.org.
